

The Lowly "Air Mail" Sticker Takes Mail to Great Heights

Until the 1920's, most mail moved by surface modes of transportation. With the rapid advance in aircraft in the 1920's, postal authorities in various countries introduced transport of mail by aircraft. Air mail transportation initially offered relatively faster delivery of mail at a premium cost. Over time, the speed and range of aircraft increased and thus airmail service gained wider acceptance by the public. In the 1970's, aircraft development progressed so much that some surface mail ceased.

Mail transport by airplane required two things - 1) Additional postage as provided by governing postal authorities of each nation and 2) Markings identifying mail to be transported by airplane. Of course, various markings to identify mail to be transported by airplane have been used over the years. Early on, various envelope manufacturers preprinted various airmail markings right on the envelopes (in various colours and various languages). Plain envelopes needed additional marking. Air mail stickers are instructions to postal officials.

This exhibit shows the use of "etiquettes" (French for labels or stickers) used to indicate that mail is to be sent by airmail. As all airmail stickers are distributed free of charge (never sold) they have no monetary value. While the only words needed are "Air Mail", a large variety of stickers have been created over the years in various languages and colours. In some cases, these labels have promoted various airlines and other ventures. This exhibit shows the great variety of air mail stickers used. This review is not exhaustive. Many other stickers exist.

Someone's sample of stickers from four different countries - all bilingual.

This exhibit does NOT provide any details of the printing or any additional information about these labels. The labels are displayed and are themselves obvious. Please examine each sticker for its variety in this display exhibit.

All stickers are on postally used mail.

These labels played an important role as instructional markings. In the 1970s and 1980s when air transport became economical and more widely adopted than in earlier periods, most international mail was sent by airmail. Surface mail was not an option. If the mail contained sufficient postage for airmail, no sticker was required. It should be noted that parcels and bulky letters were still subject to postal scrutiny as per weight limits.

In justice, however, to the labors of St. Sebastian
I must declare that the custom of throwing oranges at strangers for the purpose of bringing on an assignation, which Captain Scindler, and another gentleman of Mr Cook's ship met with when here, was never seen by any of us in a single instance. We were so deplorably unfortunate as to walk every evening before their windows and balconies without being honored with a single bouquet though nymphs and flowers were in equal and great abundance.
